As the University of Kentucky senate council is asking President Eli Capilouto to stop reviewing the university’s shared governance structure, the president says he will keep reviewing the process moving forward and年底前是美国总统选举的时期。Capilouto says he plans to continue the process of reviewing the university’s shared governance structure.

Capilouto said in an interview with the Herald-Leader Monday that he plans to continue reviewing the university’s shared governance structure. He said he plans to continue the process of reviewing the university’s shared governance structure.

Capilouto said that out of respect for those he is still meeting with, he wouldn’t yet share concrete ideas about what shared governance could look like. Capilouto said he has met with over 240 faculty, staff, students and administration members in small groups to gather feedback for how shared governance should look.

As part of work group 5, “more responsiveness,” UK worked with Deloitte Consulting and presented at the April board meeting. The charge is part of Project Accelerate, which focuses on improving the university’s operations.

Rodriguez said in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees. Rodriguez said in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

The senate council outlined several concerns in the resolution Monday about the shared governance review. The senate council outlined several concerns in the resolution Monday about the shared governance review.

As of March 6, the senate council has approved a resolution directing Capilouto to “formulate recommendations” on the university’s governance processes, in particular the senate’s oversight of student and staff decision-making and policy-setting processes, while giving equal governance to the administration.

As of March 6, the senate council has approved a resolution directing Capilouto to “formulate recommendations” on the university’s governance processes, in particular the senate’s oversight of student and staff decision-making and policy-setting processes, while giving equal governance to the administration.

The senate council — the executive arm of the university senate — approved a resolution Monday about the university’s governance processes. The resolution Tuesday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

Rodriguez said Monday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

"The University Senate Resolution is important because President Capilouto’s commitment to consult with students, faculty and administration will allow him to evaluate and determine whether there are better ways to incorporate the perspectives and expertise of staff and student members and students, as well as faculty, in our decision-making and policy-setting processes, while giving equal governance to the administration and our University Senate."

As of March 6, the senate council has approved a resolution directing Capilouto to “formulate recommendations” on the university’s governance processes. The resolutionTuesday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

Rodriguez said Monday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

"The University Senate Resolution is important because President Capilouto’s commitment to consult with students, faculty and administration will allow him to evaluate and determine whether there are better ways to incorporate the perspectives and expertise of staff and student members and students, as well as faculty, in our decision-making and policy-setting processes, while giving equal governance to the administration and our University Senate."

As of March 6, the senate council has approved a resolution directing Capilouto to “formulate recommendations” on the university’s governance processes. The resolutionTuesday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

The senate council — the executive arm of the university senate — approved a resolution Monday about the university’s governance processes. The resolutionTuesday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.

Rodriguez said Monday in an email to the Herald-Leader that she will be meeting with groups across campus and will stick to the timeline from the board of trustees.