2j. Course Description for Bulletin: What are the relationships between globalization, development, social justice and health? How do different global health interventions influence how people provide and seek out solutions to chronic and emergency health problems? This course explores contemporary global health issues from an anthropological perspective. Participants examine health effects of economic collapse, disasters and socio-political changes in industrialized and developing countries. We also study the growing global health industry from a social science perspective to evaluate the strengths and limitations of international aid, humanitarian interventions and NGOs for the wellbeing of individuals and communities. Topics include chronic and infectious diseases, environmental disasters, pharmaceuticals and the traffic in human organs. Course materials include texts from anthropology, mass media, documentaries, blogs and Twitter feeds. This course will be of interest to students in anthropology and the social sciences, International Studies, pre-med students and those who are interested in pursuing advanced degrees or professional careers in development and policy.
