4__Additional_Information: = This request seems quite straight forward and reasonable. Currently the Martin School has a policy by which doctoral students without a masters degree who fulfill all other requirements for the MPA may substitute their doctoral Qualifying Exam for the final master\'s exam and thereby receive the Master of Public Administration.

This proposal is to extend the same policy to non-masters degree doctoral students who fulfill all other requirements for the Masters of Public Policy, i.e., that they may substitute their doctoral qualifying exam for the final masters exam and thereby receive the Master of Public Policy degree.

Given that the Martin School has two masters degrees and only one doctoral degree, it seems only fair that doctoral students without a masters degree be able to substitute their doctoral qualifying exam for the final masters exam in either of the masters program, whichever one is more appropriate to their particular field of student within Public Administration, as long as they have completed all other requirements for that particular masters degree.
